After decades of research into different fields of printing technology, 2008 marked a next turning point in Océ's history. Océ decided to focus on inkjet technology as much as possible for future developments. Océ's Marcel Slot and Herman Wijshoff explain the rationale behind that choice and where they expect inkjet technology will take us.

SONET's overhead gives you communication channels for monitoring the system and sending maintenance information in-band; that is, over the data channel. OC-48 is an interesting technology because it rides the cusp between and bridges the electrical and optical worlds. SONET scales down nicely from OC-48.

In fact, the capacity of systems will grow as technologies advance that allow closer spacing, and therefore higher numbers, of wavelengths. But DWDM is also moving beyond transport to become the basis of all-optical networking with wavelength provisioning and mesh-based protection.

Evolutionary development (“evo devo”, or ED) is a minority view of change in science, business, policy, foresight and philosophy today, a simultaneous application of both evolutionary and developmental thinking to the universe and its replicating subsystems. It is derived from evo-devo biology, an emerging set of theoretical and empirical approaches to understanding biological change.

SONET offers an additional basic unit of transmission, the STS-1 (synchronous transport signal - 1), operating at 51.84 Mbps - exactly one third of an STM-1/STS-3c. That is, in SONET the associated OC-3 signal will be composed of three STS-1s (or, more recently in packet transport, the OC-3 signal will carry a single concatenated STS-3c.)

LAN and WAN technologies move beyond 10Gbit/s By Chris Cornish, Senior Design Engineer With data network bandwidth increasing rapidly, LAN/WAN convergence is expected to begin at 10Gbit/s. Network equipment designers are turning to high speed FPGAs capable of supporting OC-192 and 10Gbit Ethernet data rates.
